More Free Software for Windows: ]> Windows Experience Index for 2016 14 Aug 2016 16:12:27 +0000 10 may have some improvements in the WLAN speed, but the one on the UI (user interface) has remained the same for quite some time. As such, one would have expected this major upgrade to provide the user with a modern, sleek and clutter-free user interface. One would have expected the same for Windows 10; but that's not the case. Despite the fact that Windows 10 is considered as a very quick operating system, it is still far from being a smooth and slick experience. The Windows Experience Index (or simply Win-10) is a yearly ranking that measures the experience of Microsoft Windows 10 on the current PC architecture. This is a key indicator of how the company's OS is performing against the competition. The index was created as a result of a Microsoft survey which was performed by Raymond Wong from the IT professional. The Win-10 report is made available to the public every year after the Windows 10 is released. In the latest report, Microsoft places Windows 10 as an outstanding operating system. This version of Windows 10 has managed to raise the scores in just about every category. One of the most important findings of the Win-10 report is that Windows 10 comes in the upper half of the list in terms of performance. Another important finding is that the newer the device, the better the performance in the latest Win-10. This is a remarkable achievement considering that Windows 10 is still very much a developing operating system. "For Windows 10, the main focus is to set the bar high for the enterprise and SMB experience as a first-class citizen in the Windows ecosystem," said Matt Tournoj, corporate vice president of the Windows Hardware Engineering Group. Overall, Windows 10 scores more points in the recent Win-10 report. Other research organizations, like J.D. Powers and NPD group are also of the same opinion as Microsoft. The Windows Experience Index 2016 was just released.
