For my purposes, I use a 8th-generation Intel Core i5 processor and a Samsung 15-inch Pro, and the software smoothly performed as expected. To be fair, I didn't use the same settings for multiple tasks, but I did try to capture 1- and 2-person portraits, a simple landscape, and a moving image. And the 20-inch Pro model I've seen offers even more processing power, so those who have that setup and a much higher budget might be able to do even more. I was initially a bit skeptical about using the Apple Pencil for photo editing, but Adobe's current crop of desktop and mobile apps are the best out there, and the iPad Pro was well-suited to the task. I made several photos on the iPad Pro using the Pencil before narrowing down my favorites using Adobe's tools. ABOVE: A portrait shot taken with a Pentax K-1 DSLR and the iPad Pro using the Pencil in Adobe Photoshop CC. 1. With the Pencil enabled, the app detected my fingers on the screen, and the painting and cropping tools worked exactly like they did on my screen. Of course, it was easier to work with the speed of the iPad Pro, eliminating any lag or delay. Unfortunately, since the iPad Pro's screen is better suited to painting, it's disappointing that there's not an option for turning off the Capable Pro tool when using the Pencil. 2. I also appreciated the strip of tools at the bottom of the screen, where a single button is dedicated to switching between tools, cleaning up errors, and the Apple Pencil mode. These are all very useful. (There's an option to change the pen color, but I'll talk about that in a bit.)
